Modern-Day Slavery and Human Trafficking Statement

As a social enterprise, RedEverywhere is committed to supporting educators, employers, and learners across the UK, working closely with young people and communities to improve outcomes. Our central mission is to foster positive change by empowering young people and communities we engage with, contributing to enhanced overall well-being and societal betterment. We focus on developing and delivering effective and innovative learning, and personal social development, as well as publishing educational content.

In line with our commitment to social responsibility, we are unwavering in our dedication to ensuring there is no modern-day slavery or human trafficking within our supply chains or any aspect of our business operations. Thoroughly assessing the risks associated with various supply chains, including publishing and printing services, IT services, conference and venue suppliers, training providers, consultants, and marketing services, is a fundamental part of our approach.

We expect our suppliers and contractors to uphold a zero-tolerance stance towards exploitation. Actively avoiding engagement with businesses involved in slavery or human trafficking is a non-negotiable principle for us. Throughout our procurement process, we exclusively partner with suppliers and contractors who confirm their compliance with relevant legislation.

To further support our mission and commitment, we are dedicated to raising awareness among our staff regarding how to recognize and respond to indicators of human rights abuses. We continually adapt and promote our existing company policies, including our whistleblowing policy, to incorporate modern slavery and human trafficking concerns. Our commitment extends to all individuals involved with RedEverywhere, aligning with our core mission and values as a social enterprise.
